To trade daily bias, start by analyzing from higher time frames and then move to lower time frames. Here are some rules to help with trading daily bias:

1. If the price has taken internal liquidity, the next draw on liquidity (DOL) will be external range liquidity, or vice versa.
2. Price moves for two main reasons: to target liquidity and to rebalance pricing gaps.
3. Always seek trading opportunities that align with the larger time frame's confluence.
4. If, on the higher time frame, the price is moving from Internal Range Liquidity (IRL) to External Range Liquidity (ERL), then switch to lower time frames during ICT Kill Zones. Wait for a liquidity sweep in the opposite direction of the external range liquidity.
5. Observe the market structure and open your trade when the price returns to refill the price imbalance.
